Italy's indignant soccer fans broke out into chants of "We hate you!" on Tuesday, sending a powerful message of defiance to the controversial FIFA president Gianni Infantino even as the organization backed away from renewing a four-year, multimillion-dollar sponsorship agreement with him. In his first official meeting since succeeding Sepp Blatter as FIFA president, Infantino met with disgruntled Italian fans in Turin after he appeared to dismiss their concerns about the 2018 World Cup hosted by his homeland. "We are at a moment of honesty, of truth," Infantino said at the start of the meeting, standing alongside Italy's prime minister, Giuseppe Conte. The president of the organizing committee for the 2018 tournament, Italian soccer's governing body, the Italian soccer federation, said the meeting was meant to "listen to the fans, who are very strong and very popular." The audience's resounding chants of "We hate you!" were directed at Infantino, a member of FIFA's executive committee who took over as president of world soccer's governing body on Monday. Infantino responded by smiling and shaking hands with the fans. Afterward, he spoke briefly with reporters in a flowery Italian accent. "We are a team, we are a family, we are good," he said. "And if you open your heart and open your heart, you'll see it's a family." FIFA has yet to announce which marketing deals it intends to renew, but L'Equipe, an influential daily newspaper in France, reported on Tuesday that it received a bid from Infantino to keep a $52 million sponsorship deal with Paris Saint-Germain, the French soccer club. The apparent renewal of the deal, which was signed in 2015, would be the first major new sponsorship in the wake of Blatter's resignation as FIFA leader, although that appears to have been settled already. FIFA's sponsors are among the richest
